Continuation of Substance of Interview including description of the general nature of what was agreed to if an agreement was reached, or any other comments: Applicant explained the invention and the distinction between the motor of Patel and that of the invention. Applicant explained that the AC excitation of Patel is not used for position determination in the same as the inventive method. Applicant further argued that Patel can not be modified by Rozman to result in the claimed invention as, although Rozman has an AC-excited field winding it is not analogous to the system of Patel and a combination would not be possible. Examiner explained that the previous combination was based on the assertion that the system of Patel could be used to monitor the position of the rotor of Rozman. Examiner further explained that the basis of interpretation for claim 1 was that the language "as a function of" was sufficiently broad to include any position determining method related to an AC-excited motor such as that of Rozman. Examiner suggested that the claims be amended to include more specific and technical language relating to the type of motor of the invention and to distinguish the purpose and type of AC excitation signal being claimed..
